

NHI conducts train the trainer session

Employees from several local companies recently attended the five-day 'International Award in Delivering Training' programme at the National Hospitality Institute in Wadi Kabir.

The programme, certified by UK's Highfield Award Body for Compliance (HABC) develops classroom-based group training skills.

Participants learn how to design and deliver structured training sessions, and how to make them interesting and stimulating. More importantly, they learn how to set clear learning outcomes or targets, and how to check that these have been achieved.

Says the course leader, Julie Locke, "I love watching the participants gain confidence and polish their skills during the week."

Robert Maclean, principal of NHI said, "Employers across a range of Oman's industries increasingly need competent internal trainers to develop their workforce.

"This programme is a popular, effective means of equipping new and established trainers with the necessary professional skills."
